Never Too Late To Share!

Though the hot weather is almost behind us , this article written by Alan Neuburger and submitted by our Oregon District Educator , Graham Munsell contains some valuable information.

We have all attended and participated on numerous classes regarding excessive heat and riding. A member of our group recently shared the following information highlighting the unusual effects of heat .

Please review the information, digest it and share with your GWRRA members and friends.

Riding In The Heat

While riding in the beautiful warm weather is a fun thing to do, we sometimes do not realize how hard that can be on our bodies.

Case in point: a couple of weeks ago, while driving in my car to Eastern Oregon, I came across 2 motorcycles parked in the gravel on the side of the road. I didn't notice anyone with the bikes so I looked around to find the riders. I saw one sitting in the shade of a Juniper tree and the other was standing nearby.

I got out of my car and checked on them. The one rider standing was in full gear, and said that the other rider needed help. I asked if they needed water and they did. I was told that the rider in the shade had crashed and was waiting for an ambulance to come.

The injured rider I will call #1, came towards me for the water, and I made him get into the car, since I had air conditioning. Rider # 2, had come across the bike laying on the side of the road, and had helped Rider #1 to get in the shade. He called for an ambulance but it had been more than 20 minutes. They were just a quarter mile from the fire station, so I decided to take him there. As I was pulling out the ambulance showed up.

The story that I got from #1 was that he was riding along, and just passed out. He had not been drinking. I asked when he had had something to drink, he said, I can't drink while I'm riding, so I was waiting till I got into town to get a beverage. He was fairly banged up and had some road rash. The ambulance folks began treating him, and they took it from there. They determined that he had passed out from heat exhaustion.

This entire incident reminded me of a few years ago. I was riding in a group from John Day to Burns Oregon. We had traveled quite a few miles that day and still had some to go. It was over 100 degrees in the valleys. As we were heading south up into the mountains the heat really did not decrease. I did not know that I was beginning to slur my words and wobble a little. My co-rider tapped me on the shoulder and asked if I was okay. Of course I am, I said. But then my eyes were blurring and my head was bobbing a bit, and my co-rider yelled at me to pull over and stop. I came to a stop and began to fall off the bike, it was all she could do to keep it from falling over. My friends in my group then got me off the bike and I sat down on my trailer. My one friend put a cool vest on me which helped a lot! I ended up on the back of my friends trike while his wife drove, he took my co-rider and my bike and we proceeded to head for Burns.

I had drank water but was only sipping on it, not taking long drinks. It was also ice cold, which shocks your system into believing that it is hypothermic, and pulls all of your blood to your torso to protect your body and forces your body into shock. I recovered in the hotel a few hours later, but I had to ask what had happened, because I couldn't remember.

When riding in heat, always dress to keep your body from being overheated, wear a cool vest under your standard jacket, take long breaks in the shade to cool your body down, drink lots of water and do not ride if something feels off. When drinking water in extreme heat, drink it at room temperature. Remember that a cold one will not help.

Keep the rubber side down and the shiny side up my friends;

Alan Neuburger
